To start off, here are the basics: * Create a new file (File > New) and then use the File menu to open a color image. * Choose File > Open. * The dialog box shown in Figure 2-2 appears. Click the Open button to open the photo and then view it in the photo area. * Change the file type. For a still photo, change it to JPEG. * If the file is imported from a camera, import it to a new file by clicking the small box next to New from Camera. * For a scanned document, click Browse and navigate to the location where the original file is stored. When you click Open, Photoshop opens it and displays it in the photo area. Figure 2-2: Use the File menu to open a photo for editing. If a photograph is too small to see the entire subject, you can zoom. To zoom the image, select it by clicking it with the Selection tool (marked by the + sign) or the Eraser tool (marked by the X sign). Choose View > Zoom to see a detailed view of the image. If you need to crop a photo to include only a portion of the subject, you can do this by selecting the photo with the Selection tool. Then choose Edit > Crop. The dialog box shown in Figure 2-3 appears. Drag the crop handles to accurately crop the photo. Figure 2-3: The Crop dialog box enables you to crop an image. If you need to fine-tune the crop to fit a specific aspect ratio, use the dialog box shown in Figure 2-4. Choose View > Zoom > Zoom to Fit and drag the crop handles to the exact width and height you want. Figure 2-4: Choose View > Zoom > Zoom to Fit to set the exact dimensions of an image. Many designers, graphic artists, and photographers use the Crop tool when they need to create a smaller version of an image or create thumbnail-size images for the Web. A cropped image may have no outer edges, which is a common problem for graphic designers who need to make their design elements stand out from the overall image. The Crop tool enables you to easily crop out the extra space around the edges to expose only the needed area. You can easily create this effect by using the Crop tool. If you want to hide a particular photo layer so you

[Construction of humanized anti-HER-2 monoclonal antibodies and their cytotoxicity to HER-2/neu overexpressing tumor cells]. A phage display library of human peripheral blood lymphocytes was constructed and the library was subjected to panning against HER-2/neu antigen. The antigen binding antibody designated as 2H10, which strongly interacted with the antigen, was cloned and sequenced. Then 2H10 was used to construct humanized anti-HER-2/neu humanized antibody 2H10 HuZh-4 by grafting CDRs of 2H10 to the frameworks of humanized antibody 2H10 HuZh-4. Finally, the hybridoma cell line secreting the humanized antibody was selected. The analysis of 2H10 molecular interaction with its target antigen (HER-2/neu) was performed by using HLA-DR and/or ICAM-1 molecule coated plates. The in vitro cytotoxicity of 2H10 to HER-2/neu positive BT-474 cells and 2H10 HuZh-4 to HER-2/neu positive SKOV-3 cells was investigated using [3H] thymidine incorporation method. 2H10 showed a strong binding to HER-2/neu-positive target cells, but did not bind to HER-2/neu-negative target cells. 2H10 HuZh-4 demonstrated stronger cytotoxicity to HER-2/neu-positive BT-474 cells than 2H10. T1-based Fat-sparing Contrast Using High-pitch Dual-Source Dual-Energy CT in Patients With Solid Organ Malignancies: Feasibility, Morphologic Characterization, and Comparison with Contrast-Enhanced 18F-FDG PET/CT. This study aimed to evaluate the feasibility and morphologic characteristics of the high-pitch dual-source dual-energy CT (DSDECT) technique for T1-based fat-sparing contrast and to compare DSDECT with contrast-enhanced (CE)-18F-FDG PET/CT for detection of malignant lesions. From May 2015 to January 2016, 40 consecutive patients with solid organ malignancies underwent T1-based fat-sparing DSDECT and CE-18F-FDG PET/CT. Total-body DSDECT images were acquired using a 16-slice CT scanner. Attenuation correction for each D

Mercury swans and colony size-colony age relationships in a nested mobile population. Mercury swans, Cygnus olor, are a dynamic and connected population with a range of 1 million square kilometers that includes three geographically distinct breeding colonies. Past research has concentrated on the migration of individuals. Here, we investigate age-related patterns of disappearance and mortality in a nested population with a population-level perspective. It is a first step toward understanding population dynamics and assessing the sustainability of the population. We examine long-term population trends and use multi-model inference to analyze annual cohorts of birds. We apply Dempster-Shafer theory of evidence to multiple hypotheses that connect swans at several colony sites to determine whether they are related through permanent site fidelity. We compare group size-colony age relationships and assess whether large colonies have a higher chance of disappearance. While age structures at all three colony sites are dominated by first-year birds, the most likely colonization number at the West Island and Southwest Island is two, while other colonies are favored by one. As expected, the West Island exhibits non-overlapping annual cohorts, while only a few first-years are present at the Southwest Island at a given year. Removal rates at the West Island decrease with group size, while they exhibit a sharp decline at Southwest Island with increasing group size. Larger colonies are more stable, but also more likely to disappear. Our study reveals that while individual behavior is ultimately responsible for demography, the entire population is an active part of the demographic process, with migration causing changes in population dynamics. The results indicate that long-term population viability may be jeopardized by prevailing demographics. Analyses of colonization number and annual cohort size are useful for interpreting long-term population trends and predicting the future and for initiating conservation management. The need for multidimensional scaling in information visualization. Information visualization is the process of identifying, interpreting, and communicating visual representations of information. Visualization can involve multidimensional scaling (MDS) and principal components analysis (PCA). Multidimensional scaling is a technique that allows for data reduction through the creation of a two- or three-dimensional representation of data. Although often intuitive, the use of MDS is not straightforward and requires careful consideration of data and its visualization. When data are not suitable for the use of MDS, alternative methods such as PCA should be used.
