I was unable to use the program until I figured that out. The in-program "translator" was unable to translate the formulae from Italian to English, but it was able to translate them from English to German. Secondly, the "calculator" was unable to do basic things like what the probability of a 6, 14, or 18 number sequence was. There were, however, a few things that made the program very useful. The calculation of winning numbers for the lotto is a feature that the program lacked. I calculated it myself and figured out how to break down the winnings to see if I had drawn the right numbers. Lotto-Experte would be a better program if it had a built in calculator to do this, but it's not a deal breaker as it is." "The following features I think are most useful: * A lottery player can add custom generated numbers to the database
