Analysis of the HLA frequency in cases of disseminated melanoma and its clinical use]. Analysis of HLA frequencies in 31 patients with disseminated melanoma revealed a significantly higher frequency of HLA-DR3 in the group of stage IV patients (38% vs. 9%). In stage III, T-lymphocytes are most likely activated by tumor antigens with HLA-DR3 and HLA-DQw3, whereas cytotoxic T-cells with HLA-DR3 are mainly responsible for eliminating disseminated melanoma cells. The prognosis of patients with melanoma, who are negative for HLA-DR3 is significantly better than in HLA-DR3 positive patients. The frequency of HLA-DR3 seems to be a prognostic parameter that is independent of the stage of disease. A new study by researchers at NC State University's School of Behavior, Ecology and Evolution has concluded that, contrary to conventional wisdom, the ability to play chess is largely genetic. Using a combination of genetic and behavioral tests, the researchers showed that while genetic differences account for about half of the ability to play chess, environment accounts for about half of the other half. Lead researcher

Howard Milner, a professor in the school's Division of Biological Sciences and a professor in the Department of Psychological Sciences, said, "Although everyone believes that chess is a skill which must be learned, we have shown that for most people and all races the ability to play a high level of chess is largely genetically determined." The researchers used more than 100 children from the United States and 30 of their parents, whose identities they kept secret, in the study. The average age of the children was 9.6. In addition to taking physiological tests, Milner's team collected genetic information to determine the parents' chess ability, and then the children took four tests of chess ability 09e8f5149f
