To review the maternal and fetal complications associated with diabetes during pregnancy. The literature was reviewed using Medline, PubMed, and the Cochrane Library. A search was conducted using the keywords "diabetes and pregnancy", "pregnancy and diabetes", "pregnancy complications and maternal diabetes", "pregnancy complications and fetal complications", and "fetal and maternal complications". Diabetes is the second leading cause of maternal mortality in the USA. Pregnancy has an adverse effect on diabetes, causing additional disease burden, affecting both maternal and fetal outcomes. The risk for diabetes in pregnancy is increased with polycystic ovary syndrome and other chronic diseases. Complications of pregnancy include gestational diabetes mellitus, preeclampsia, eclampsia, fetal macrosomia, morbidly and/or terminally and preterm premature rupture of membranes. Women with pregestational diabetes mellitus have an increased risk of hypoglycaemia and greater morbidity with diabetes during pregnancy. More than one-third of pregnancies occur in women with diabetes mellitus, for which there are new treatment options. The number of pregnancies involving women with pregestational diabetes is increasing. A large number of women with diabetes are at risk of complications due to glycaemic control during pregnancy. Therefore, screening for glucose levels is important for women with pregestational diabetes, and those with gestational diabetes mellitus. Even though current screening methods have limitations, it is important to meet the needs of all patients before delivery. Management options for treating diabetes during pregnancy include insulin, a single or multiple daily injections of insulin, oral agents, and insulin analogues. In addition to glycaemic control, other complications of diabetes should also be treated. For women with pregestational diabetes, the most important management is glycaemic control. Consideration of the implications of maternal and fetal outcomes is important in the perinatal care of women with diabetes. For those with gestational diabetes, the key issue is glycaemic control."All candidates for the presidency, given the prospect of victory, supported the official version of the shooting of President Kennedy, regardless of the content of the evidence or the demeanor of the Hello, I have a Nikon Df and it may be better to use Df than Nikon D810. Can you tell what format to use when.Q: coordsys Python numpy I have to use the module 'coordsys' on my project. I have a big problem when I work on shapefile. The problem is really simple : when I use the coordsys.project() function to project a shapefile coordinates in 2d, I want the coordsys.project() to work on the XY coordinates of my shapefile rather than using the latitude and longitude. As the shapefile location is something like : myFichier = r'C:\Users\my_user_name\Documents\entranceMap\observations.shp' So I tried this code : coordinates = conosys.read(os.path.join(myFichier, 'observations.shp'), 'DOUBLE') # To read my shp prj = conosys.project(coordinates, '2d', use_GEO='use_geo') # this will give me a X,Y if the observations are in a 2d projection or lat long prj = conosys.transform(coordinates, 'latlong') # To transform my coordinates in lat and long I get this error Traceback (most recent call last): File "C:\Users\my_user_name\AppData\Local\Programs\
