Business users are recommended to check out it's Free Alt Commander alternative - Kupfer: a fast and flexible multi-tool for Windows. If you're having trouble viewing videos in your Internet Explorer, you might need to update the browser. The integrated Flash Player is one of the main problems. To solve the matter, follow the listed directions below: How to solve the videos problem in Internet Explorer: Right-click on the icon (of the video) and select to download "Video" to save the file. By doing this, you'll be able to watch the video online with a new browser window. To get to a new browser window: Left-click on the video and drag it to the browser window. After this, the video will play in its integrated player. Please note that Microsoft's Edge browser does not have the support for flash. So, if you are using it, you will not be able to watch online flash videos. In case this doesn't work for you, you can try a different browser that does support it. Below are a few alternatives to download (especially if you're a Windows user): Note: If you're still stuck for the solution, feel free to post a comment, and I will try to help you. You may also try the online video site that can help you to fix the problem. Thanks! Many drivers are available for older unsupported computer models and for the benefit of customers who have bought their laptops, refurbished them, or switched to a new model, we decided to offer them a benefit. For a while now, we have been producing computer hardware with support by third-party companies who manufacture it to our specifications. Laptops are the most popular devices for this purpose. Although this type of machine does not fall under the specified computer model, that does not mean that you will not benefit from the support, as laptop computers have very specific areas where we have focused our attention: Communication with a router Wi-Fi hotspot Internet connection Media cabling Battery life Power supply A computer with a market value of more than $1500 is going to need constant
