Calcium-binding proteins were characterized in rat duodenal mucosa and were separated by differential pepsin extraction. Magnesium-binding proteins were also characterized in the same extract, which were different from those found in the duodenal mucosa. The bound calcium in the extract was 45% of total extractable calcium, and represented about 70% of calcium which bound to the mucosa, when magnesium was eliminated. The binding was pH dependent, the lowest being at pH 8.0. Magnesium-binding protein was identified as a protein with a molecular weight of about 25 kD in the extract, and about 20 kD in the mucosa. Magnesium-binding protein was more soluble than calcium-binding protein. At pH 8.0, the highest ratio of soluble to insoluble magnesium-binding protein was 0.4. The ability of magnesium-binding protein to absorb calcium was demonstrated ca3bfb1094

He would sit with them for hours, offering advice and encouragement, and he always read the rough storyboards the animators did for the films. But he didn't pull his punches. He encouraged the animators to look beyond the simplest caricature to find the emotion and feeling they wanted to express in the character. This storyboard is from "The King Of The Mummy's" (1930) and shows Disney sitting with Roy. Disney read the storyboard and told Roy, "Don't you feel your mouth moves like that?" He knew that the character needed to have a different way of talking. Disney wanted more emotional moments in his films. In fact, in the "Fantasia" sequence, he asked animator Max Fleischer to do "the funniest thing you can imagine". It's "Keep Up With The Joneses". While the English version is a silly stunt, the spirit behind Disney's request is something that stands out in Disney's work.A therapy dog named Winnie has gotten a lot of attention for providing comfort to the grieving family of the Boston Marathon bombings. Now, she has a new assignment. Winnie, a 7-year-old bloodhound, is the new Therapy Dog and Security for the U.S. Capitol Building. "She's always been there for people," John Wigley, a past volunteer at the Greater Boston Food Bank, told Boston 25 News. "When we're driving in from the food bank, there's a lot of traffic coming up through the center of Boston, and she's always in the lead and she's always at the center of attention. It's great to see her be able to give back." Winnie was recently featured in a therapy dog video that had more than 1.7 million views on YouTube.
