Usefulness of adenoid cystic carcinoma in differential diagnosis of pleomorphic adenoma with minimal deviation of the salivary gland. Although adenoid cystic carcinoma is considered as a malignant tumor of salivary gland, it may be confused with benign tumors of the salivary gland and be diagnosed as pleomorphic adenoma. Thus, the purpose of this study was to analyze the histologic and immunohistochemical characteristics of adenoid cystic carcinoma of the minor salivary glands and to confirm the usefulness of their differential diagnosis. Among 106 cases of pleomorphic adenoma diagnosed at the Tokyo Medical University Hospital between 1990 and 2008, we reviewed 5 adenoid cystic carcinoma cases that were identified by histologic and immunohistochemical analyses and analysis of mutation in the p53

gene. The adenoid cystic carcinoma consisted of uniform round to oval tumor cells with occasional cytoplasmic vacuoles arranged in solid, cribriform, or tubular patterns and without nuclear atypia or stratification of nuclei. Immunohistochemical analysis revealed expression of p63 in all tumor cells. Tumor cells in the adenoid cystic carcinoma showed negative expression of cytokeratin 7, cytokeratin 8, and calponin. However, focal expression of cytokeratin 19 was observed in a few tumor cells. The patients were females (n = 3) and males (n = 2) who ranged in age from 53 to 71 years. According to clinical outcomes, 4 patients were alive without evidence of disease, and 1 patient was alive with lymph node metastasis. All adenoid cystic carcinomas were characterized by positive expression of p63, and cytokeratin expression was negative. The evaluation of the histologic features and the results of p53 immunohistochemical analysis will be helpful in distinguishing adenoid cystic carcinoma from benign tumor lesions of the minor salivary glands. Line-shape analysis of the Raman spectra of the one- and two-site hydrogen-bonded geometries of the Mg-pyrazole system. The Raman spectra of the magnesium chloride complex of the pyrazole ligand is shown to be clearly distinct from that of pyrazole in liquid solution. The spect
