Larvicidal activity of Artemisia annua and its essential oils against Culex pipiens (Diptera: Culicidae). In this study, the larvicidal activity of Artemisia annua L. and its essential oils were investigated against the third-instar larvae of Culex pipiens L. The main constituents of the essential oils were identified using GC-MS. The results indicated that the essential oils from A. annua had the highest larvicidal activity against third-instar larvae of C. pipiens L., with an LC(50) of 3.45 mg/mL. The larvicidal activity of the essential oils from A. annua was found to be less toxic than that of the essential oils from Azadirachta indica A. Juss. (LC(50) = 27.3 mg/mL). The results indicated that the larvicidal activity of A. annua essential oils was significantly higher than that of the essential oils from A. indica A. Juss. and Artemisia asiatica Buch-Ham., which were much lower than the essential oils from A. annua. If you live near an ice cream parlor and happen to have a taste for blended beverages, you may be in for a treat. An international study has uncovered strong links between the kinds of flavanones found in dark chocolate and the kinds found in pomegranate juice. The findings, published in the journal of the British Society of Antioxidants on Monday, have been greeted by other scientists as "important, interesting and almost groundbreaking." "It's the first time we have seen this relationship," said Dominique De Azevedo, a professor of medicine at the Universidade Federal do Rio Grande do Sul and principal investigator of the study. "I would not necessarily say it's unequivocal, but it looks very good." Dr. Azevedo's research focused on the flavanones, compounds that have a dark magenta color. She and colleagues conducted experiments on mice, first giving them diet supplements that included powdered mango pulp. Then they gave the mice a dose of pomegranate juice that was equal to three or four glasses of red wine. Halloween In India: Ganesha Scares Drive-In Thriller! Quick! This is a blog all about my experiences - good and bad - as a new mommy to my little girl who just turned 18 months old! Monday, November 2, 2013 Happy Birthday Baby! We had a very full day yesterday. It started off around 9:00 am, when I had to meet my oldest son at the grocery store to get some baby food. He and his girlfriend decided to go to the zoo (which is about 30 minutes away), so we headed out to grab a bite to eat with their daughter before we left. When we arrived home, my son and daughter played on the floor for a bit, and then proceeded to roll themselves around in a blanket. I took their picture with my phone, and then decided to change their diapers, one by one, as they looked like they were starting to soak through their blankets. The last
