Spikes is a simple game, where you are thrown into a wasteland and you need to collect as many souls as you can to get to the next level. The more souls you have, the more chances you have to win. If you die, you lose your souls. Upgrade to become stronger, beat bigger enemies and defeat bosses. These enemies can hit you with different kinds of attacks, including lightning, flames, spike bounces, levitate and many more. Collecting souls and money is the goal of the game. American Angst is a multiple-choice interactive fiction driven by your imagination. The player takes the role of "the unknown" – a person who woke up in a prison complex after being kidnapped and tortured. Now it's up to the player to find out why he ended up there, and why the prison warden wants to kill him. Your choices determine the narrative of the story and will determine how the story unfolds. Will you be a silent witness, a passive protagonist who will slowly unravel the mystery? Or will you go for your life – killing all those you meet along the way? You decide! The game has been developed using Twine, which is a text-based game engine that allows you to tell a story in full freedom. The player's imagination is as important as the choice you make in the game. The more subtle choices will have a meaningful impact on the story. The game does not feature graphic violence, no sound effects (only text is used), no mini-games and no extra graphics. Twine helps the player stay immersed and focus on the text. The story unfolds in five separate chapters, each dealing with different parts of the main story. You are able to control where you go and what you see. American Angst is an interactive novel game set in a dystopian world, brought to you by M3G1DD0. You want more American Angst on Twitter? M3G1DD0 is a writer and developer at DMs-maker DM-dd-s. It's time to take out the cold back and enjoy the cosy warmth of the stove. Choose between increasing your strength, your strength and your damage, your armour, your movement speed, or all of the above to make your way through the obstacles in your path. Do you want to smash open boxes, build ladders, destroy walls, or destroy everything?Your weapons can be used to punch, prod, shoot, or pull. Collect tools and use them to craft traps, vehicles, and items. Your weapon choice matters, as different weapons have their own set of features. The Warrior wields a small shield, and can move and shoot from anywhere. The Mage's ranged attacks use lines of magic that may be shot at, pulled back, or moved quickly. The Rogue uses blades, can shoot and punch, and has no penalties for moving quickly. The Ranger wields heavy guns, can move over walls, and can attack from anywhere.The Paladin wields a mighty sword and has a wide range of abilities, including the ability to use shields, run, and jump.Heck, let's let the painting industry alone, shall we? Only one of those challenges will be supported in the main game, but we are still adding more as of today. Get building!Trees create impassable walls, dangerous barriers, and opportunities for ambushes. Cut them down, and you can walk through them. Ladders can climb through walls and fences. Once you are high, it's time to grab a hold of it. You can climb on it, throw a tool at it, or use a rope to pull yourself up. Push it and it will fall, pull it and it will break off. Planks are another type of ladder, that can swing from side to side and sometimes move slowly through a solid obstacle.Wooden ramps, platforms and traps can all be built. Tools will allow you to build these pieces of infrastructure. Use the right tool to build what you need. When you're done, set it on fire and watch your enemies burn.Bridges are another piece of infrastructure, that can be built with a specific tool. They can span gaps, or trap your enemies.There are several other features in the working game as well, like materials to build vehicles and houses, crates, biomes, and tools. You play as the last Nomad left on this planet, a living fossil. The other survivors are gone, long dead from the end of the world. But you aren't going

The August issue of Russian Cosmos: A Magazine of Urban Astronomy includes a review of Sect Virus Monday, July 4, 2013 July 4th, 0330 am - 0330 pm; Unable to sleep, I review this book. Note: This is part of the July 4th, 2013 literate fanboy naturalist romp. The rest of the month is devoted to books dealing with the Cthulhu Mythos. I am also reading Beneath the Ocean's Surface by Peter O'Donnell and I will be posting an article on it on a biweekly basis until I finish the book. The text on this book was in Russian and I tried to look up the text for this edition online. Then decided that perhaps I should just learn Russian myself and read it aloud to myself. As I am not doing that part, I won't go into detail about the text In this edition, the long awaited Cthulhuysity, inspired by a Russian legend, was released by Vladimir Megre: Ekaterina Borovoi (who was the author of the short story "Red Mother", a canonical part of the occult movement in Russian journalism) had the idea of creating a continuation of Vladimir Megre's stories. After that, the future of Turbulence Diary, and the rest of Megre's writings, became uncertain. A character from this novel, Siren, was one of the central characters of "Tempered in the Mists", a prediction made, among others, by Joseph Curwen. So, I am glad to see that Ekaterina Borovoi still has her creativity and this time it wasn't taken away from her. The first thing that caught my attention was the description of a young man who woke the world from its long slumber And again there was a boring and disorganized pedant (trying to be colorful without making the story intelligible, one can't win them all) There was another gabble, well-known from "Malfeasance in Wonderland". Then there was what I thought to be the best thing from the story: This scene, again, was taken from the "Lost Hearts" series of short stories by Frederick Nolan, where the author described the craziness that
