A C-terminal fragment of the transcription factor Tax1 promotes apoptosis in cells derived from the early osteogenic lineage. The osteoblastic transcription factor Tax1 is known to regulate transcription from the mouse collagen alpha1(I) promoter. We report here that a C-terminal fragment of Tax1, Tax1(1-122) activates the mouse apurinic/apurimidine endonuclease (Mlh1/Msh2) promoter in cell-based assays, and inhibits osteoblast proliferation. The Tax1(1-122) domain conferred the ability to induce cell death in M1.09 preosteoblastic cells. M1.09 cells are derived from M1 clonal cell cultures, which are developmentally related to osteoblasts. These results show that transcriptional factors can function as apoptotic factors. Tax1(1-122) activation of the Mlh1/Msh2 promoter was dependent on the presence of the proximal promoter region of the promoter. In addition, Tax1(1-122) induced Mlh1/Msh2 expression in embryonic stem cells. These data demonstrate that Tax1(1-122) can promote apoptosis in cells derived from the osteoblast lineage. In a recent interview with The Wall Street Journal, White House chief strategist Steve Bannon said that those who are optimistic about President Donald Trump's economic agenda, despite his recent failure to push his controversial health care legislation through Congress, are "acting like suckers." "I want to be really clear in the media: The two people that understand what's going on in this economy are President Trump and me," Bannon said. "Everyone else is an analyst. They don't have the depth of understanding. We have a far better sense of where
