A molecular dynamics simulation is performed to investigate the influence of surface defects (dislocations and twin boundaries) on the strength of the (0001) α -Al₂O₃ surface. The study is based on a force-field developed recently to characterize the interactions between dislocations and atoms, and between twins and atoms. The investigated surfaces are initially free of defects, and then dislocations and twins are placed on the surface. The defects are either single or multiple, and their distribution is varied among the surface in order to simulate the surface states of α -Al₂O₃ that can be obtained by the oxidation of the surface. The
