Quick Search Variation on a Theme Orange, Pumpkin and Chocolate: Delicious Surprise In this variation on our winner, a deep bath of chocolate, deep orange and spicy pumpkin make a backdrop for elegant fig, with nutmeg adding a burst of warmth. A subtle herb line in the praline scones brings a welcome kick to the savoury theme, and a sprinkling of nuts on top of the scones brings in a bit of much-needed texture.

Ingredients 150 g unsalted butter 200 ml milk 1 vanilla pod, split in half lengthways 300 g icing sugar 3 eggs 125 g plain flour 1 tsp baking powder 250 g Butternut/pekie pumpkin (or other winter squash), peeled and cut into 1 cm cubes 6-8 drops amber or orange food colouring 1 tsp cocoa powder 4 tbsp milk 2 tsp pumpkin pie spice 1/2 cup toasted or blanched hazelnuts praline 2 eggs 2 tbsp milk 50 g caster or granulated sugar 150 g unsalted butter 250 g icing sugar 50 g almond meal 20 g chopped pistachios

Toast the hazelnuts in a dry frying pan over a medium heat for about 5 minutes, or until they start to turn golden. Set aside to cool. We recommend that you use a garlic press, and it will allow you to create a smooth paste that you can use for the scones. If you don't have one, just crush the cloves roughly using the side of a knife.

Preheat the oven to 180°C. Bake the scones for 18-20 minutes or until the top is just starting to turn golden. Meanwhile, prepare the praline. Cream the eggs and sugar in a stand mixer on high speed for 5-7 minutes. Meanwhile, place the butter and icing sugar in a saucepan and set it over a medium heat. Stir gently until the butter has melted and the mixture is smooth. Stir in the almond meal, then add the eggs, beating constantly until smooth. Turn the heat to low and stir in the pumpkin pie spice. Pour the mixture into a piping bag with a 2 cm piping tip and pipe the praline onto a sheet of baking paper. Lay it flat on the tray

[Relationship between TLR2 gene polymorphisms and multiple myeloma]. The aim of this study was to investigate the relationship between multiple myeloma (MM) and single nucleotide polymorphisms (SNPs) in the gene encoding for Toll-like receptor 2 (TLR2) in patients with MM. The genotypes of SNPs in the coding sequence and promoter of the TLR2 gene in 209 patients with MM and 302 healthy controls were analyzed by PCR-based restriction fragment length polymorphism. The genotype frequencies of -169 T > G in the promoter of the TLR2 gene was significantly different between MM patients and healthy controls ( $P = 0.023$ ). There were significantly more homozygous G alleles in patients with MM (37.8%, 55/143) compared with healthy controls (22.4%, 47/210), and the heterozygous (T/G) allele was significantly less frequent in patients (43.9%, 63/143) compared with the controls (57.1%, 128/210). The OR of -169 G allele for multiple myeloma was 0.67 (95% CI: 0.46 - 0.99,  $P = 0.044$ ). This results indicated that -169 G allele of the TLR2 gene could be a potential candidate for the susceptibility to MM.

Illusory contours in the human visual system? Illusory contours are perceived in various visual systems, such as in the human visual system. In this study we will review studies that have looked at the neuronal activity in the human visual system that might be related to the perception of illusory contours. In these studies it has been shown that neurons in the human visual cortex have responses to contours consisting of collinear or non-collinear pixels. Collinear and non-collinear contours result in differential responses in the visual cortex. It has been shown that the representation of the collinear contour is more robust in the brain than that of the non-collinear contour and that the perception of illusory contours is accompanied by increased activity of neuronal population. On the basis of these findings, we suggest that the visual system may be predisposed to perceive illusory contours. In the
