Aldo Zaccaria Pinball – despite some video game pinball clones, he is one of the few owners of the famous “Italian Touch”. This time he built the future world table model with a special theme – outer space. It has a playfield width of 68 cm, which makes it relatively narrow for today's standards and it is equipped with 2 flippers and 3 kickout holes. To make it more special Zaccaria arranged several features including: – a unique drop target which is revolving around the playfield for adding more fun to the game; – the future world table has been designed to play in the semi-automatic version! Other than that it is an integral part of the game and it works nice with the sound track, too. And ....It is not meant to be a match-3, arcade or skill game; a classic and entertaining pinball game. Thanks for your interest and enjoy the game. -- Design: Nick Worrall Physics: John Cranmer Graphics: Giro Doro Layout: Dave Batty Animation: Ruth Swinstone Programming: Tim Penfold Chiptune: Mike Kidd, The North Brother Cover art: Tim Penfold Music: Dave Batty Disclaimer: This table model is a fan creation, while copyright to Aldo Zaccaria remains with Pin<sup>4</sup>ge Amusement and its worldwide licensees. Archibald 2 is an undersea explosive device developed by Allied Project Grigri and used by the United States Navy during the Battle of Leyte Gulf, World War II. The first of the series, Archibald 1 was lost during a training mission, and was followed by an improved version, Archibald 2. Background One of the great naval sea battles of World War II, the Battle of Leyte Gulf, took place on 22-23 October 1944 off the island of Leyte in the Philippines. In that battle, the United States and Allied forces had defeated the Imperial Japanese Navy to decisively turn the tide of the Pacific War in favor of the Allies. The naval significance and the importance of victory in this battle are reflected in the fact that the Second World War, at this point in time, was almost completely decided, as the Japanese island strongholds of the Luzon, Java and Gilbert Islands had all been conquered by United States and allied forces. For the twin advantages of its geography and naval base, the Luzon island was the logical target for invading forces from the south. Occupation by U.S. forces began in October 1944 in preparation for the expected invasion. Military resources were employed to prepare an improved system of shore bombardment for these new islands. Shore batteries, in many cases, were located on the opposite shore, across the water, and could not effectively attack Japanese shipping moving up and down the coasts. Armor-piercing weapons, useful in destroying naval gun mounts, had difficulty penetrating enemy vessels as well. Explosives made of cast steel and thermite had poor performance in maximum range, because of great losses from surface and aerial bombardment. Some of these shortcomings were due to the introduction of exploding shells and/or fragmentation shell technology into how naval gun and ordnance was designed and constructed. Hence, a program of development of newer types of projectiles was needed. Project Grigri, under the direction of Edwin A. Junker at the Navy Ordnance Test Station, was established to study projectiles to find out how to provide maximum range capability for long-range and high explosive shells. The Grigri program was to build small explosive devices and test them on the sea bed before use. The first Grigri tests took place in 1944 during shakedown of the USS Ticonderoga. By early June 1944, the Navy had placed an order for Project Grigri for 20 Grigris, 9 for testing and 11 for record of firings
