one way or another: Lourdes, the Jesuit St. Ignatius, will always be part of my life as a Catholic and also my own personal experiences with the Divine. On one of my flights to Lourdes in July of '94, I prayed in God's name for answers to certain questions I had been wrestling with for some time. In a flash, I was in the arms of God and as I looked down I could see an image of a blonde young woman with radiant eyes; her face surrounded by innumerable yellow flowers. I knew this wasn't some trick of the sun or my dreams; it was the Blessed Virgin Mary, and it was the beginning of my final flowering in the Catholic faith. I realized that in this new more humble state, I would be a better person and would be more in touch with people and everything around me. From this first visitation a friendship formed between me and Mary, and I found comfort and guidance in an outpouring of mercy and compassion. The concept of St. Mary of Lourdes, especially as an expression of the Guadalupe doctrine, resonated with me. The Gospels have Jesus visit his mother and heal her of illness. He then goes on to visit other mothers as he sets out to search for the lost sheep. I knew Mary of Lourdes, the apparition in the Grotto, stood for something larger than herself. She was an instrument in the hands of God for deliverance from sin, suffering, temptation and all that caused us to stray away from God. I knew that St. Francis of Assisi and the Franciscan Order had similar things to say, although a little more on a national scale. I also knew from my studies in theology that the most virile and powerful words in the Catholic faith were taken from St. Francis: "Pray as if everything depends on you, and act as if everything depends on God." I knew this new path lay ahead for me, and that it would be one of mental clarity, emotional sensitivity and interior quiet. I had had this experience of the Divine before, but I had always been a little more focused on the exterior side of Catholicism. Now I felt the focus of my spiritual quest could be as much about interiority as about the outer world, and interiority was a far greater imperative. After this initial visitation and epiphany, I could truly say that I had found my way back home

Colorectal cancer and heme oxygenase (HO) are two attractive, unifying concepts in the etiology of CRC. We propose that the induction of HO may prevent the development of CRC, and that epigenetic mechanisms are at play in this process. These concepts will be tested in a series of experiments in cell culture models and animal models. Specifically, we will use a small molecule inhibitor of HO induction and induction of two prototypical genes from the cadmium response (Cd-rep) in CRC models to determine if the inhibition of HO alone or in combination with Cd affects the CRC development. Other experiments will be performed in an animal model of CRC to examine the induction of HO in different organs in order to determine if HO induction is effective in two different tissues of CRC. Our hypothesis is that the inhibition of HO will lead to the induction of HO and the protection of the colon from CRC development. The detection of epigenetic modifications that are associated with HO expression will provide further insight into the mechanism of HO induction in CRC. Epigenetic modifiers have been linked to the development of CRC. We will use a series of in vitro and in vivo experiments to test if epigenetic regulation is part of the regulatory mechanisms of HO induction. Finally, the potential use of the HO inhibitor as a chemopreventive agent will be tested in a pilot study in patients with IBD. The proposed studies may lead to an innovative, unifying concept that could be extended to the prevention of other cancers by modulating epigenetic mechanisms in the body. PUBLIC HEALTH RELEVANCE: Colorectal cancer is one of the most common types of cancer in the United States and is a major cause of death. We propose that heme oxygenase could be an effective target for preventing the development of this disease.Q: What does "them out" mean? What does "them out" mean? What
