Aster V7x6x64 keygen 4Nominees from around the world will gather Tuesday, July 14 to compete for the 2017 Scripps National Spelling Bee's grand prize of $50,000. This year, more than 1,000 spellers have put their names on the board for this year's competition, up from last year's 818 spellers. For the third year in a row, the youngest speller was 15-year-old Langtong Zhang, son of a mechanical engineer and a neonatal nurse. Last year, 16-year-old Jin Zhu won the bee, first from Asia. It's hard to argue with that winning streak. Zhang achieved a score of 70 percent, or one out of 14 correct answers. That's pretty good. (Zhang's first two answers were on Chinese characters in a preliminary round; Zhang's father, who has coached him, helped him out by putting the text of the character under the board when it was Zhang's turn to spell.) But we have to give credit to other spellers who have also done well in previous bees — and those who didn't make it. "Langtong," "Ludwig," "Oromis," "Xenakis" and the other names you'll see on the final results page all spellers who have continued a tradition of hard work, dedication and hunger for fame.

Zhang's father, Lang, told CNN that he's a big fan of the spelling bee, not just because of the money, but for the growth of his son's confidence. "It has helped him become much more [like Lang]," he said. "He's very independent, but he really wants to help others, and that's good." The whole family has given the bee a lot of effort. Zhang's seven-year-old sister, Anna, worked hard at the
