It's the first year in my life that I've been out for pictures with snow on the ground. It snowed the last time I took pictures with my parent's camera in high school. That was a whole other world. It didn't seem normal then. Now it seems pretty normal and I'm not complaining. There's just this sinking feeling that we'll be outside when we're not supposed to be. Living in a frozen tundra is simply not a good feeling. Sorting through my photos from October and November, it seems as though the snow in Wisconsin was far more intense than what we had in Seattle, Seattle sounded like a perpetual hurricane during October. But, back to the Wisconsin snow. In my mind there is nothing more beautiful than snow-covered trees, undisturbed by humans, and blue skies that reach above the clouds. I think about that quite often as I see the green roofs and lush grass growing in front of my neighbors. As I continue to go through the images, there's a bit of a drought period that follows the intense snow storms. But, all is good now. My favorite photos from these two months were taken around noon, early afternoon and late evening. The warm light is perfect and it doesn't overpower the colors. This time of year is almost perfect for focusing on the simple things. My goal has been to make time to enjoy what I see around me. Light the fireplace and put on a good sad song. Let it breathe for the moment. The thing about embracing the seasons is that it happens naturally. The days turn to nights and the seasons change. I like the change of seasons. I also like the extra time I have when the fall has passed.Q: List of tuples as an input for MultiIndex If I have a list of tuples and I want to convert them into a matrix, then what is the most efficient way to convert them?
