It is located at 1 Union Square, and is now called Saint Ann Church. St. Ann's Church was built in 1823 and was designed by Henry Bull in the Newburyport style. Bull had previously designed the Capitol building, first building of the Common Council of Boston, in 1807. It was added to the National Register of Historic Places in 1987. Background The North End (in Boston), where the church is located, is a densely populated neighborhood where almost half of its residents are poor. The area's poverty has resulted in high levels of political activism by residents. St. Ann's Church parish is currently served by the Missionary Society of St. Columban. However, St. Ann's has been a long time religious home for the Irish in Boston. The church site was once a Jesuit mission, Saint Peter's Church (1640-1710), which in turn was the location for a Jesuit school from 1681 to 1710. In 1710, the Jesuits were expelled from Massachusetts. The site was then given to the Society of Jesus, who built Saint Peter's Church. Controversy 6d1f23a050
