. which simulates the real-world look of film and paper prints and brings their natural grain back toÂ . River Row River Row is a street in the village of Walcott, Essex, England. Formerly known as High Street Walcott, it runs north-south through the centre of the village. In the south of the street there is a notable group of thatched cottages, which were probably built in the 17th century and were therefore among the earliest buildings on the street. The River Len is just to the west, with pedestrian access to the Chingford to Loughton railway line, formerly part of the Great Eastern Railway. The Little Len and indeed all the other streams that flow into the River Len are very small, most of them not more than a few centimetres in width. They all eventually flow into the river on a large island in the centre of the river. The Essex and Suffolk Border Railway ran along the southern edge of the street. Walcott is the first town in England to have an all-female police station. It is on the northern side of River Row, near the railway station, but is out of reach for the public. Normally I would do something like this: public class CustomComparator extends Comparator { @Override public int compare(T o1, T o2) { int cmp = super.compare(o1, o2); if (cmp!= 0) return cmp; return CustomComparator.comparingInt(o1); // how to make this work } } However Java 8 won't let me override the method in the manner above. Is there a way to make this work? A: You can't partially override a method.
