The spring game, new season-opener, the new offensive coordinator, and most importantly, the new offensive line coach. Former ACC offensive line coach Paul Randolph stepped down after three years to accept a position with the NFL. Replacing him was new offensive line coach, Ed Warinner. This is the third player to transition from the offensive line to the head coaching position for the Wolverines over the last 10 years. Dan Enos took over the offensive line in 2007 from Joe Barnes. Enos himself was a former offensive line coach at UCLA, North Carolina, and New Orleans. Barnes, a defensive line coach, was a former assistant at Michigan, as was Randolph. The transition was fairly seamless. Barnes had a great rapport with the players and was well-liked. He went with Enos when he came to Ann Arbor, and Enos had great success. However, Enos' abrupt departure to the NFL for one year in 2013 left a void in Ann Arbor. Then in 2014, Warinner came along to relieve Enos. He had a successful first year at the helm, as many of you have noted. So why is Warinner in such a unique situation? He has essentially become the head of the offensive line. The former offensive line coach has had a year to set up the staff and properly interact with the players. If success does not come from the start, the staff will be able to look at 6d1f23a050
