Windows XP is pre-installed on the Acer 8920, making this an equally rare deal among notebooks. You'd be hard-pressed to find another midrange notebook with that combination. Windows 7, Acer's latest and greatest operating system, will debut on the Aspire 8920 when it ships sometime this quarter. Although it's still a build-to-order and production-level model, if you order now you can get a Windows 7 installation media disc, right now. We're not usually keen on lending out a full suite of multimedia software such as Adobe Premiere or After Effects, but the Asus laptops that have Adobe Premiere have been a real game-changer for us, so we couldn't resist offering up these Acer laptops to you. Asus provides an ASUS home theater application that includes codecs and a DVD burning application that includes support for most formats, meaning you'll be able to watch some of your favorite Blu-ray disc movies in your Acer laptop. Asus also include a tool for creating and mastering DVDs. Unfortunately, both of these suite of applications require a license on the PC. Thankfully, Asus do provide a free trial version of the software, though you'll need a small fee to use the full version. View our other reviews of Acer laptop products at SlickDeals.net . While some media PCs include small-touchscreen TVs that aren't particularly capable, the Acer Aspire 8920 has an option for a 20-inch HDTV that can be viewed via a computer. If you're into older films you can even use the main screen as a standard Blu-ray Disc player. For those who want something a bit more portable, the Acer Aspire 8920 also provides a copy of Windows Mobile 6 Standard to complement the Windows 7 beta (though you have to buy the Windows 7 beta).

The CineDash is covered in touch-sensitive plastic, but the controls are too small and too distant from the on-screen buttons to be useful. If you're an Android enthusiast, the CineDash's specifications -- a resolution of 1366x768, a native pixel density of 185 pixels per inch (PPI), and a screen size of 12.1 inches -- are better than those of the Aspire 8920G . The CineDash is a touch-panel desktop computer, not a PC like the Aspire 8920G, and Acer claims that it has a useful range of applications and utilities including Blu-ray compatibility, digital TV, photo printing, and a phone connection. The CineDash also has an Ethernet port, a USB port, and a multimedia jack. This sounds like a pretty handy little gadget that might make your life a little easier, but we'll have to see what all it can do. Aspire 8920G is a powerful laptop that can do almost anything. It has a large 6-cell battery, which should provide good battery life, and a 1.8 GHz Intel Core i5-5200U processor. Acer's on-screen keyboard and the touch-panel CineDash are housed in the usual keyboard tray and monitor stand, and there's a DVD drive in the same location as the multimedia controls on the bottom of the laptop. The keyboard is stylish but cramped and this model is not big enough to support a touchscreen, so Acer provides a remote control with a built-in accelerometer to control the laptop's basic functions, but this is like the Control-Alt-Delete to the CineDash. Acer continues to leverage the brand of its tablet family to launch a new computer designed as a home entertainment hub. The Acer Aspire 8920G is equipped with a 10.1-inch LED-backlit display that supports a wide range of inputs and outputs. As with other Acer Aspire models, the Aspire 8920G uses a keyboard with blue backlighting as well as a TouchPad that can be used to move around the desktop. 5ec8ef588b
