The application manifest indicates that this side-by-side configuration error may occur if the application references one or more of the following features: Code Access Security (CAS) Resource Access policies Type coercion Reflection Alfresco serialization Windows Runtime Windows Runtime Policy Event Tracing AppX packages Manifest for .NET Framework apps Manifest for Windows Store apps Windows Store apps Modern application manifest Modern application manifest If the application references one of these features then the application will not be able to load and the side-by-side configuration will be considered incorrect. The side-by-side configuration of the application is blocked or prohibited because of a conflict of some kind.

The Side-by-side configuration error message is displayed by the different components of the application. All side-by-side configurations are stored and maintained by the Visual Studio IDE. If the underlying application is not configured correctly, then the IDE may fail to display the appropriate error message. The side-by-side configuration and the C++ runtime libraries loaded in the Visual Studio IDE are kept separate from the version of Visual Studio that you are using for an application. A change in the Visual Studio version may cause the side-by-side configuration to become broken or corrupted. The app may fail to load because the side-by-side configuration is not working properly.

The following section shows how to find the location of your most recent Adobe Creative Suite 5 Suite or Point Product (See the section “

What to consider when determining which program you need to reinstall ”).

The side-by-side configuration seems to have been incorrectly linked to the current directory.

Try to change the current directory to another location by either clicking the browse button, or by selecting another directory in the prompt menu.

Windows has a feature called Side-by-Side that is used to support Windows features. Apps that support this feature can be installed side-by-side with each other if you wish.

Windows 8.1 updates this to side-by-side configuration, where apps and operating system are installed with the same folder, and not side-by-side like Windows 7, Windows 8, Windows XP and Vista. From Windows 8 onward, this is done by adding an app manifest to the app.

This is done for Windows 8.1 Update
and higher. For Windows 10, this is done by the universal app platform. For Windows 7 and
earlier, you'll need to do it manually.
Manual solution for Windows 7 and

earlier: 1) Install multiple programs and software in the same directory. 2) For a program to run on Windows XP, Vista, Windows 7, and Windows 8 or higher, the program must specify an add-on called side-by-side. The side-by-side add-on associates all the software in the directory with the same folder, and that folder is called the application name folder. Therefore, if you type the following command at the command prompt: "c:\\share", then the only two programs that you can run are those that you installed in the directory C:\share\World of Warcraft, and those in the directory C:\share\Doom 3. Manual solution for Windows 7 and earlier: 1) Install multiple programs and software in the same directory. 2)
