In this study, we recorded participants' eye movements when they read text or responded to questions while sitting in a comfortable chair. The main goal was to understand how attention to the environment and the internal focus of attention change during quiet sitting. Four conditions were tested: reading, responding to a question, listening to an audio book, and watching a video while sitting. We found that participants looked at the environment less frequently while listening to an audio book than while watching a video. Importantly, participants spent more time fixating on the
