Maritime law Maritime law is the study of and practice within the legal system that governs the use of the sea and coastlines, together with the air and other natural subsoil of the earth. Maritime law, like civil law, is a distinct body of law, largely based on custom, the legal system that is most closely connected with the sea. Maritime law is legal system that covers the internal regulation of a ship and the coastline. International Maritime Organization The International Maritime Organization, an agency of the United Nations, is the United Nations specialized agency for shipping and maritime safety and the prevention of marine pollution. IMO regulations protect the marine environment, oceans, and seas of the world through the adoption of maritime law. The main agency of the organization is the International Maritime Organization (IMO), established by the United Nations General Assembly in 1948 to develop, through multilateral cooperation, the rules of the road in international shipping. United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea The United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea is a multilateral treaty on the law of the sea that has been signed by 193 countries. The UN

Convention is the foundational law for the laws of the oceans, and addresses maritime matters that are beyond the scope of the legal systems of individual countries. Maritime piracy Piracy is a form of piracy that occurs on the high seas. In 2006, the International Maritime Bureau (IMB) listed piracy as the second-largest source of seizures by the United Nations. The Convention on the Law of the Sea defines piracy as follows: "Any act of violence or detention, or any act committed with the aim of obtaining control over, or sending a threat to, a ship, aircraft or any other means of transport, with the intention of robbing the ship or aircraft or any other means of transport, and that is committed for private ends". Piracy may also include the illegal taking of cargoes or hostages. International Maritime Organization The International Maritime Organization is an intergovernmental organization set up in 1946 at the Maritime Conference in London. It is the specialized agency of the United Nations (UN) that deals with shipping and maritime safety and pollution prevention. Its five main objectives are the development of conventions, the research of maritime issues, the monitoring of marine areas, the protection of the marine environment, and the training of maritime personnel. The IMO's regulations are known as "IMO conventions" and are not a treaty of f988f36e3a
