Propagation of prolactin in cultured normal human breast epithelial cells. We studied the role of prolactin in the growth regulation of normal breast epithelial cells in vitro. Prolactin was detected in the conditioned medium from normal human breast epithelial cells, as assessed by radioimmunoassay. An effect of prolactin on the DNA synthesis of breast epithelial cells was observed, but not on cell growth or cell number, as quantified by a colorimetric [3H]thymidine incorporation assay and cell counting, respectively. An effect of prolactin was detected only in the presence of fibroblast growth factor (FGF). Our results indicate that prolactin is produced by normal human breast epithelial cells in culture, but that the effect of prolactin on normal breast epithelial cell growth is a direct consequence of FGF.
